Small Blizzard Hits Coshocton; No Damage Done

Blinding Snow Storm Which Sweeps County Causes Little Inconvenience--Loss In East Reported Great--Mercury Drops--High Wind Accompanies Snow.

The snow storm which swept over Coshocton county Tuesday was a portion, according to the weatherman, of a blizzard which swept the eastern states doing considerable damage.

Tho a blinding snow storm raged during the greater part of the morning and afternoon Tuesday, little or no damage was reported in the county and the fall amounted to an average in the county of less than three inches. A high wind accompanied the storm during the greater part of the day and the sky was overcast by dark gray clouds which indicated that a more severe storm was to follow. However, the sky cleared considerably before dark and it is thought that the worst of the storm has passed.

Gets Colder

The mercury dropped to below freezing during the day and shortly after dark reached a point just above twenty degrees. At midnight however, the big thermometer in front of The Tribune office registered twenty degrees which is said to be just two degrees higher than the lowest mark of the winter in the city.

East Is Center

New York, Dec. 14.—The center of one of the heaviest snow storms this section of the country has experienced in several years passed northeast of New York today, leaving in its wake a tangle of broken telegraph poles and wires, railroad trains stalled in snowdrifts or long delayed, and a large portion of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New England blanketed with snow from six to fifteen inches deep.

Snow was still falling early tonight altho the severity of the storm had abated. Predictions were that the storm would clear tomorrow.

The heaviest fall of snow reported in this vicinity was at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where it was fifteen inches deep. Some of the New York Central's express trains from and to the west forced their way through the drifts and arrived here today hours behind their schedule time.

The blocade of the electric zone of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad between New Yarw and Stamford, Conn., was described by officials of that road as the worst in years. Electric feed wires were down and held up every train in the zone.

Hundreds of passengers spent hours last night in stalled trains or marooned in the stations until steam locomotives were sent to pull the trains to their destinations.

The electire service was still suspended when the morning rush of commuters to the city began and steam locomotive service was in effect.

Is Arrested For Forgery

Clarence Smalley, aged about 22, was arrested last night and lodged in the county jail by Officer William Davis on the charge of forgery.

The affidavit was filed in Justice E. G. Abbott's court by George Markley upon whom the fraudulent checks are alleged to have been drawn.

Smalley will probably be arraigned this morning.

Falls On Icy Street

Mrs. Lorena Danford, of South Second street, sustained a severely sprained ankle when she slipped and fell while on her way to wark Tuesday morning. She was carried into the office of Dr. Smailes. Her injury will keep her off her feet for several days.

Miss Mary Gross, who rooms on South Seventh street, is ill from typhoid fever. She is under the care of Dr. Smailes.

Local Plant Affected By New Straw Freight Rate

When asked what effect the Public Utilities Commission's approval of the rates fixed by the railroads for the hauling of straw and which were suspended pending hearing of complaints against them by strawboard manufacturers, Karl Bachert, secretary of the Coshocton Straw Paper Company, said Tuesday:

"We will be affected by the new rates but to what extent I do not yet know. We with the other straw paper companies of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana and Michigan have been waging a fight against the rates for more than a year. We have not given up hope yet and as soon as the meeting of the different representatives can be held, some move will be decided upon."

The approval of the rates by the Commission followed a ruling by the interstate commerce commission. The rates provided for a charge of 4 cents per 100 pounds for a distance of 25 miles to 9 1-2 cents per 100 pounds for 300 miles and over.

Another Damage Suit As Result Of Small Sewer

Another suit against the city was filed in common pleas court yesterday as a result of the inadequate storm sewer facilities at Seventh and Orange streets.

Alleging that the cellar wall of his house on Orange street, near Seventh street, was washed out on June 16, 1915, when the storm sewer at Orange and Seventh streets overflowed, George W. Markley, commenced suit for $300.

He alleges in his petition that the sewer on Orange street is too small to take care of the volume of water which flows to that section of the city during every hard rain and that the inlets and catch-basins at the corner are too small and are allowed to become clogged with drift wood.

It is alleged that the city has been guilty of negligence in permitting this condition to exist.

Attorney J. C. Daugherty represents the plaintiff.

WORK HARD TO LAND MEETING FOR COSHOCT'N

Eleven Hundred In Attendance As State Grange Opens At Elyria

NEWARK AFTER MEETING ALSO

Personal Campaign Among Representatives Is Made For Coshocton

With more than eleven hundred in attendance the state grange meeting opened in Elyria Tuesday saw from the start a strenuous campaign being waged between Coshocton and Newark for the 1916 state meet.

Coshocton grangers have seven bona fide representatives in addition to others sent by the Chamber of Commerce. The grange representatives are Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Clark, of Keene Hill grange, Mr. and Mrs. Maro Valentine, of Oak Grove grange, Joseph Myers, of Perry grange, Mr. and Mrs. J. Van Winkle, of Fresno grange, who are alternates in place of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Murphy, of Fresno, Mr. Murphy being unable to attend on acount of illness. Garvey Gayle, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, Lee Moore, of Mohawk, George Stonehocker, of Oak Grove and James Clark, of Warsaw, are in attendance representing the local Chamber of Commerce in the fight to land the 1916 meeting for this city. Harry Caton, state organizer and a member of the Fresno grange, is also in attendance.

Newark Leads?

It was said last night that so far Newark appeared to have the edge on the other cities in that the 1916 meet was half pledged to her last year on condition that she withdraw from the fight in favor of Elyria. The local backers, however, are not dismayed and have set to work with renewed energies. The delegation took with them buttons and pins bearing the inscription "Meet Me in Coshocton in 1916" and literature setting forth the social and natural advantages of the city.

Work Hard

A personal campaign among the different representatives is being waged and every effort being made to land the meeting which will bring approximately 1500 persons to the lucky town for a three days' stay.

Big Increase Asked For Coast Defense

New Defense Work Contemplated In General Preparedness Scheme--Sixteen Inch Guns In All New Fortifications--Many Anti-Air Craft Guns Wanted.

Features of the New Coast Defense Plan.

Sixteen-inch guns in all new fortifications.

Ammunition reserve to supply as many rounds as each gun will stand.

A supply of huge 16-inch semi-mobile Howitzers designed to be the greatest arm of modern times.

One hundred anti-air craft guns.

Immediate mounting of the entire reserve of 12-inch guns with high elevation carriages to guard coasts until 16-inch guns can be built.

Big new fortifications at New York and Cape Henry.

Entire program to cost about $80,000,000 over a period of four years.

Washington, Dec. 14.—An increase of nearly 300 per cent over the sum spent last year for big guns, coast fortifications and ordnance included in the general preparedness scheme, is asked for in the fortifications bill prepared by the war department. Last year $6,060,216 was spent: this year $23,305,125 is asked.

The bill provides for $2,533,000 for new coast defense works and itemizes 18 new emplacements to be constructed as against eight built last year. Reference is made to the authority granted last year for the acquisition of a site at Cape Henry for this purpose. Appropriations of $1,867,000 for the purchase of other new sites for forts; $3,000,000 for ammunition for sea coast guns, of which $1,900,000 would go into armor-piercing shells, and authority to contract for an additional $3,500,000 in ammunition are included.

Secure Hammond Patents.

For the purchase and installation of radio dynamic torpedoes, recommended for purchase last year, $947,000 is asked. It is also proposed to secure the patents of John Hayes Hammond, jr., covering the wireless control of torpedoes from shore stations, to be improved by the government on installation, and wireless control of torpedoes launched from aeroplanes. Army experts have been working out details.

The bill makes ample provision under various sections for development of mobile heavy guns for coast defenses and the construction of heavy field and siege guns and mortars for the army.

A plan to permit the department to place contracts with private munitions manufacturers without advertising for bids, in order to foster the development of plants deemed necessary in the general preparedness scheme, is included in the bill. Not more than 25 per cent of the appropriations made for the ordnance department, which include the bulk of the total estimated in the bill, would be available under this provision.

Plan to Spend $80,000,000.

The bill also would provide that continuing contracts to the extent of more than $13,000,000 might be made by the department this year, to cover contracts for big guns, and other equipment which require a long time to manufacture. It will not be necessary to pay for this for two years or more. The entire proposals represent the first year's expenditure on coast defenses and other work in the development of big guns, under the administration plan to spend $80,000,000 for this purpose in the next four years

Carpenters Boost Rate

Declaring that the increasing high cost of living makes the step necessary, members of the local Carpenter's union have voted to increase their scale of wages from 45 to 50 cents per hour. The raise becomes effective on the first day of April in the new year. This will make the net day wage $4. They considered $3.60 per day insufficient to support themselves and families because of the H. C. L.

Money Saved For Victim Of Theives

It developed Tuesday that Sheriff George Pharion is making no effort to trace the thieves who robbed the chicken coop at the rear of the county jail of nine thorobred chickens several nights ago.

The sheriff is afraid that the thieves will present a bill for services rendered.

Some days ago the sheriff noticed that one of his birds was sick and in a few days the malady had spread to several other chickens. Fearing that the entire flock would become affected, Sheriff Pharion called a local poultry dealer who took the sound chickens off of his hands at the market price. Nine dying chickens were left in the coop and these were taken by the marauders.

"I would have been willing to pay a dollar or so to have the chickens taken away," said the sheriff.

McCoy Named Head of Ohio's Manufacturers

Local Man Highly Honored by State Association--Had Served as Vice President--Annual Meeting Held at Columbus--Reports Indicate Prosperity.

According to a dispatch received from Columbus, C. B. McCoy, president of The Coshocton Glove Company, was elected president of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association Tuesday afternoon.

The association opened its fifth annual session Tuesday morning and closed last night with a banquet at the Virginia hotel.

For the past year, Mr. McCoy has served as one of the vice-presidents of the organization which is probably the largest of its kind in the state. His promotion to the presidency is a decided honor as some of the largest manufacturers in the state are members of the association.

The association maintains permanent headquarters in Columbus which are in charge of the secretary, Malcolm Jennings, and Daniel J. Ryan, general counsel.

Optimistic Reports.

The morning session opened at 10 o'clock Tuesday with a talk by the former president, Charles E. Locier, of the Columbia Steel Company, Elyria, after which reports of Secretary Jennings, Treasurer George A. Archer and Attorney Daniel J. Ryan were heard. All reports were optimistic in tone and point to the latter part of this year as a period of growth and prosperity for the association as well as for the country.

"A Toast to the President of the United States" opened the banquet Tuesday evening. Former Governor Myron T. Herrick was one of the speakers at the banquet his talk concerning business and the war.

Mr. McCoy went from Washington, where he was attending a meeting of the leading boosters of Senator Theodore E. Burton's candidacy for the Republican nomination for president, to Columbus. He will probably return to this city today.

Test Fertilizer Values On Hill Land Of County

Having by a series of experiments ascertained the value of fertilizer upon what is known as river "second bottom" land to be practically nil, it is now proposed to conduct a series of experiments during the coming year with a view of testing the value of the different fertilizers upon hill farms with a clay soil. The experiments this year were conducted on the [illegible] and [illegible] farm which is bottom or river valley land. In order to properly conduct the experiment a new site must be used and it is desired to have an owner of clay soil hill land permit the tests.

The present plan is to have 12 plots, each 1-10 of an acre in extent, laid out side by side and planted in corn, fertilized as follows:

Plots Containing One-Tenth of an Acre.

Plot No. 1. No fertilizer.

Plot No. 3. Acid Phosphate, 32 lbs.

Plot No. 4. No fertilizer.

PLACES."

In this case the village of Tippecanoe in Miami county sought to protect its home merchants from the competition of transients and in deciding that the legislature was without power to authorize municipalaties by means of a license to erect a sort of a tariff wall against outside dealers, the court in the course of its opinion say:

"We might regret this conclusion if we were informed that in the village of Tippecanoe those who sell merchandise at retail out number those who buy from them. Not being so informed, we are serene in the belief that obedience to the requirements of the constitution will in this instance, as it usually does, result in the greatest good the greatest number."

Under an old ordinance which is probably illegal I collected a license fee and Seventy Dollars on Sept. 24th 1915, from a transient dealer who sold jewelry merchandise in the city for thirteen days, and on Sept. 30th this $70.00 was all paid over to the city treasurer. I have since caused a search to be made at the County auditor's office with the result that the largest local jewelry stock in the city, I have found, is not required to pay quite $25.00 into the city treasury in the form of taxes on the whole tax year of 1915, the exact amount being $24.51.

In view of what has been said, I have thot best to return to the council the [illegible] ordinance passed at the meeting held November 22nd, 1915, without approval, and with the suggestion that the council may, if it so desires, further consider the matter.

VICK'S "VAPORUB" SALVE

GERMAN PRISONER CALLS FOR VALET

Asks Captors If He May Get His Clothes From Trench.

FRITZ BRINGS THEM OVER.

Writer at the Front Describes How a Charge Is Made and Tells of Frightful Havoc Wrought by Machine Guns. Of Twelve Germans Reaching Trench, Five Are Killed.

In describing the efforts of the Germans to capture a Russian trench Dr. Eugene T. Hurd tells some interesting anecdotes of the war. He says:

"The force of each bullet as it struck the dry earth that had been used to cover the roof of the trenches shook down enough powdered dirt to cover each soldier. The Russians looked more like negroes than white men.

"The men were taking turns at the loopholes and sitting in the bottom of the trench drinking tea or munching at a piece of dry black bread.

Soldiers Long For Soup.

"Once in awhile one of them would give his slice of bread a rest while he stood up and, after gazing back over the rear part of the trench, curse the cook, who was long overdue with the two wheeled soup cart, as only a Russian knows how to curse. The longer and harder he cursed the more encouragement he would receive from his comrades.

"There was a lull in the zip, zip, plug of the German bullets. It caused each soldier to stop drinking tea and tilt his head a little to one side and listen. It was followed in a few seconds by an exclamation from the men at the loopholes.

"Every one jumped to his place, each placing his right shoulder against the butt of his rifle, which had been left in a loophole. Scarcely had they taken their places, and before they could commence firing, the loud battlecry of the charging Germans could be heard. But even their bloodcurdling yells were heard for only an instant. The terrible fire of the Russians for a few moments drowned all other sounds. Then the machine guns drowned the sound of the rifle fire.

Germans Reach Wire Fences.

"The Germans were now at our wire fence, which was only twenty steps in front of our trench. Even the machine gun fire was drowned now by the bursting bombs that were being dropped by our howitzers supporting us from behind a hill in our rear. Back of them our light artillery was making the ground in front of our trenches a living hell with their shrapnel fire. Still back of them the heavy artillery was helping to make the air hideous with their large bursting shells.

"This is the moment when the well trained and service hardened soldier shows his mettle. His work is to pick off the men who are not brought down by the machine fire, the shrapnel and bursting shell. It is the moment when the untried soldier gets what is often called 'buck fever,' which means that his nerves are at such high tension that he could take point blank aim at the side of a horse only a few steps away and miss the horse.

Twelve Gain Russian Trench.

"Some of the Germans jumped over each fence as they came to it, others climbed over, others lay down and crawled under, and still others stopped and commenced cutting the wire. A few new recruits even took shelter behind the small fenceposts that were only three or four inches thick. Many turned and ran back to the shelter of their own trench.

"The time had now come when the attack was to be either a success or a failure. Could the high courage of the Germans hold out long enough for them to follow the few leaders that were left or would it break, in which case they would turn almost to a man and run for their own trench?

"Twelve of them leaped into our trench. The rest broke and ran back. The attack had failed. Five of the twelve were killed with the bayonet, the others taken prisoners.

Servant Brings Luggage.

"The firing stopped as suddenly as it had commenced. The still air was now filled with the cries of the wounded that lay among the dead on the field. Among the seven prisoners was a young officer. From his actions he had evidently been somewhat of a dude at home. He turned to one of our officers who could speak German and said: 'This is very unfortunate indeed. What am I to do?'

"The Russian answered that he need not worry about that at all, for we would be more than pleased to look after his future welfare until the war was over. 'But,' he exclaimed, 'I have no luggage with me. May I ask my servant to bring it to me from our trench?'

"The answer was 'With pleasure.' He stepped up head and shoulders above the trench and called in a loud voice 'Fritz, Fritz, oh, Fritz!' After a few moments he poked a head from the German trench in answer. 'Fritz, bring me my luggage.' Fritz appeared again crawling over the fencing loaded down with the officer's baggage. They both took it as a matter of course and left for our rear together."

BOY CORN KING OF OHIO TELLS HIS CROP PLAN

It is not by accident that Dewey Haynes, of Arcanum, Drake-co., O., is the champion junior corn grower of Ohio.

Altho only 17 years old, Dewey has his own special system of growing corn.

He believes in his system, because it is the second time he has won the junior championship.

He has lived on a farm all his life, and he hopes to spend the remainder of his life on one.

Believes in Soil's Future

His ambition is to become a scientific farmer, for he believes that farming is the finest of all scientific professions.

The record with which he won the championship was 153.7 bushels of corn from a single acre.

Here is Dewey's own story of his system:

By Dewey Haynes

I selected seed for my acre early last fall, and, after drying it, I put it on a board with spikes driven thru, so that one ear would not touch another during the winter.

The ground was plowed April 26. It was disced four times with a double cutaway disc, then harrowed and rolled before planting.

It was cultivated four times in addition to the work of hoeing that was done.

The secret of success is good seed corn, well-drained ground, well worked; consistent cultivation, with due regard to the weather and the proper use of fertilizers.

Above all things, you must have ground.

New Century Club With Miss Adams.

Miss Charlotte Adams was hostess at the meeting of the New Century club held at her home on Chestnut street, last evening. The two papers were: "Women of the New Testament," by Miss Custer and "Heroines of Today and Yesterday," Miss Helen Brown. Plans were completed for the Christmas party of the club to be held on December 27 at the home of Mrs. D. O. Thompson, on Park avenue.

Miss Sophia Wilson, of Columbus, was a guest of the club.

REAL ESTATE DEALS MADE

A deal was closed Saturday in which a five room house on North Eleventh street was sold to Blaine and Anna Wilson, of Canal Lewisville. They will move to their new home at once.

A modern six room house on Cambridge street was sold to J. A. Borden of Franklin township.

Both sales were made thru the McConnell & Karr real estate agency.

Busy Day For Mayor

Monday was a busy day for the police court. Seven were arraigned before the mayor. All pleaded guilty and were given fines ranging from $5 and costs to $200 and costs. None, however, were ordered to pay the full amounts.

Determined to call a halt on the gambling games and schemes of chance which are being run openly thruout the city, the police Sunday arrested John Branfield and Homer Kline, proprietors of the Park View pool room, and Tom Pentel, proprietor of one of the Pentel candy stores, on charges of promoting a scheme of chance.

The three were arraigned before the mayor Monday and pleaded guilty. They were each fined $50 and costs and ordered to pay $1 and costs, the remainder being held over to provide against future offenses of like nature.

Sells Liquor.

James Rozoe, 20, colored laborer at the Clow plant, was arrested Sunday on a charge of selling liquor without a license to Daniel Roberts. Upon being arraigned before the mayor Monday morning, Rozoe pleaded guilty and was given the minimum fine of $200 and costs. He was ordered to pay $10 and costs and released. A portion of the fine has been paid.

Row Aired.

Blake Senter, Noel Senter and Harvey Bryant were arraigned on a charge of attempting to provoke a breach of the peace preferred by J. E. Wright, proprietor of a store at Willow Brook. The case was heard before the mayor Monday.

According to Wright's testimony, the trio have been in the habit of coming into the store and raising a roughhouse for some time. Saturday night and again on Sunday they continued their annoyances, until Wright became "peeved" and filed a charge against them in police court.

After hearing the evidence against them the trio pleaded guilty and were fined $10 and costs apiece. They were ordered to pay $1 and costs which they did and were released.

Ira Seward was arrested Sunday on a charge of intoxication, and upon being arraigned before Mayor Staats, pleaded guilty and was fined $5 and costs. He was ordered to pay $1 and costs.

What To Do To Get Fat And Increase Weight

The Real Cause of Thinness.

Most people eat from four to six pounds of good solid fat-making food every day and still do not increase in weight one ounce, while on the other hand many of the plump, chunky folks eat very lightly and keep gaining all the time. It's all bosh to say that this is the nature of the individual. It isn't Nature's way at all.

Most thin people stay thin because their powers of assimilation are defective. They absorb just enough of the food they eat to maintain life and a semblance of health and strength. Stuffing won't help them. A dozen meals a day won't make them gain a single "stay there" pound. All the fat-producing elements of their food just stay there in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste. What such people need is something that will prepare these fatty food elements so that their blood can absorb them and deposit them all about the body—something, too, that will multiply their red blood corpuscles and increase their blood's carrying power.

For such a condition it is well to recommend eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is not, as some believe a patented drug, but is simply a careful combination of six of the most effective and powerful assimilative and flesh building elements known to chemistry. It is absolutely harmless, yet has been wonderfully effective and a single tablet eaten with each meal often, according to reports of users, has the effect of increasing the weight of a thin man or woman from three to five pounds a week. Sargol is sold by Wimmer-Arnold Drug Co. and other good druggists everywhere on a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Palmistry.

Palmistry in its modern acceptation is divided into two branches—chirognomy and chiromancy. Chirognomy defines the outward shape of the hand and of its members, the thumb and fingers. Chiromancy is also derived from the Greek and signifies divination by the hand—that is, by the lines, mounts and other marks on the palms of the hand.

SMOOTH STRANGER VISITS COSHOCTON

No doubt many readers of this paper who reside in Coshocton, have within the last few days noticed a strange man slightly over the medium height, and dressed like a successful commercial traveler, he carries a black leather grip, and has a pleasing address and the appearance of a man who is thoroly familiar with city life. His methods are as follows: He first selects his victim, and greets him with a friendly smile and shake of the hand, as tho he was an old acquaintance, and begins to talk of the near approach of the Christmas season, and the loved ones we should not forget upon that day of days, and while he keeps up his flow of conversation, he quietly opens his grip, and displays a beautiful assortment of LaVallieres, brooches, stick pins finely set with stones of various kinds, new designs of sterling silver spoons. The new styles of Waldemere chains, Sterling silver puff boxes, napkin rings, Sterling Bon-ton baskets, and numerous other articles which usually sell at retail from $2.50 to $4.50. And the stranger offers his new found acquaintance his choice of any article in the lot of only $2.00 and if the victim is not wise he will in most cases take the bait, and be out of pocket just one dollar, as these same articles have been selling at retail price at Brooke's Jewelry store ever since Dec 1st, for this exact amount and being shrewd he bought them at Brooke's for a dollar each, and could readily sell them to people who was not familiar with his low prices on Christmas goods.

CLAY FOR BRICKMAKING.

The Wealth That Lines the Shores of the Hudson River.

Magnificent and inspiring as the scenery is along the towering banks of the lordly Hudson, it is not anywhere near as much of a money maker as the lowly bricks which are made along the shores of that favored stream. In the ten years past some 11,250,150,000 bricks, valued at $60,407,258, have been fashioned out of the clay close to the water's edge. These bricks, if laid flat, would make a sidewalk that would reach around the world. And it is estimated that there is still enough clay left on the banks of the Hudson to make 1,200,000,000 bricks a year for the next fifty years.

This stratum of clay extends along both sides of the Hudson from New York to Cohoes, above Troy, and takes in ten counties, one of them in New Jersey. It is the greatest brickmaking district in all the world. For a century the industry has thrived, and, strangely enough, the method of manufacture has changed hardly any in the lapse of years.

It was in 1817 when the industry began to thrive. James Woods, an Englishman, had learned the trade of brickmaking in his native land and was attracted to Haverstraw, up the west bank of the river a few miles from New York. The vast quantities of fine brick clay there and the abundance of wood for fuel appealed to him, and he started the first successful brickyard in Rockland county. To Woods is given the credit for discovering that coal dust made a fine ingredient for good bricks. He also invented tempering, mixing and molding machines, and these, but little modified, are used even in these times of new appliances for all forms of the industry.—New York World.

A MEMORY OF RACHEL.

The Great Actress After a Night of Triumph on the Stage.

Lord Glenesk gave me an account of his first meeting with Rachel. He had gone to Paris for the first time as a youth, and for the first time his father had taken him to the Francais to see Rachel act. The entire audience had been stirred to the wildest pitch of enthusiasm and excitement. The next morning early he had ridden to the Bois with his father, and on the way his father had said, "We will turn out of the avenue a moment, down this street; I want to show you the house of the marvelous woman we saw act last night."

It was barely sunrise, and as they pulled their horses up outside a high wall inclosing a small villa they were astonished to hear, proceeding from within, what appeared to be the reacting of the very scenes they had witnessed the night before at the theater, but spoken in dead tones, as if by a somnambulist. Dismounting from their horses, they entered the garden. There they found Rachel, clad in loose garments, dull eyed, with disheveled hair and a mien utterly void of all the flaming magnetism that a few hours earlier had filled her frame.

To the questions of Lord Glenesk's father she answered wearily that she had been rehearsing there under the trees since it was scarce day, trying in vain to find means of expressing certain passages in which she had "failed at the night's performance"—that performance which had so thrilled those who witnessed it, marking an epoch in their lives.—Princess Lazarovich in Century.

GRANGE MEET

Grange, L. J. Taber of Barnesville, addressed his standing committees at this meeting. He then addressed the convention, reviewing the accomplishments of last year and forecasting those of the future.

Last night there was a public reception in Tech High auditorium at which Mayor Charles E. Tucker extended to the visitors the hospitality of the city. Former Congressman A. R. Webber delivered the address of the evening, his subject being "The wonders of the soil."

This afternoon and evening degrees will be conferred on candidates at the Elks hall.

Thursday there will be election of members of the executive committee. There will be no election of officers, as the present officers were chosen last year to serve two terms. The place of meeting in 1916 will be decided at this session.

The Daughter's Idea.

Mrs. Brown was in the habit of introducing her big daughter as: "This is Jane. She's only fifteen. You'd never think it, would you?"

At last the girl protested. "It's mean of you to tell everybody how young I am. I could have a lot better time if you didn't."

"Perhaps you could. But I don't propose to have people saying after you've been out in society a couple of seasons: 'Don't tell me Jane Brown is only twenty. Why, she was a grown girl years ago.'"

"Just the same," retorted the daughter, "you wouldn't like it if I introduced you to my friends as: 'This is my mother. She's only forty-eight. You'd never think it, would you?'"—Judge

A FURRED TONGUE.

It May Mean Wrecked Nerves and Not a Disordered Stomach.

"I suppose that there is no more ineradicable idea in the mind of the doctor than that the furred tongue is essentially an indication of a deranged stomach," writes Sir James Goodhart, consulting physician to Guy's hospital, London, in the London Lancet. Yet, according to Sir James, it is by no means always so. And he goes on to prove it by cases in his own extensive practice.

One of these was of a man in a very responsible position, a leader of men, to whom he had to give orders that had to be obeyed and from whom he had to hear much grumbling; a very hard worker and "the fastest talker I ever met," full of energy and [illegible] every ounce of it. He was in [illegible] health, but suffered from a furred tongue and a bad taste in the mouth. In his case these were not due to the stomach at all, but to a disordered state of nerve control.

"Nervous fears and nervous tastes are common enough, and they deserve a special thought," says Sir James. He believes that man is kept sweet and wholesome largely by nervous control, and when he loses this control "the parts become fevered, the mucous membrane dry, the nerves irritated, and taste is perverted." The [illegible] so affected are those who are nervous, anxious, hard workers, taking their work home with them to think about and [illegible] about in bed.

PROPER USE OF LIME IS EXPLAINED

The question, what crops will be benefited by the use of lime is often asked. The following table, prepared by L. C. Shaw, of Warsaw, will answer this question.

First. Plants greatly benefited by lime. Beans, tobacco, wheat, barley, clover, alfalfa, peas, cabbage, onions, celery, beets.

Second. Plants slightly benefited by lime. Potato, buckwheat, turnip, tomato, corn, timothy, blue grass, oats.

Third. Plants indifferent to lime. Millet, carrots, red top.

Fourth. Plants injured by the use of lime. Watermelon, sheep sorrel, dewberries, strawberries, cranberries.

The use of lime may be summed up as: chemical, physical and biological.

Chemical action: (a) Changes insoluble compounds into available plant food. (b) Neutralizes acids.

Physical action: (a) It causes baked soils to become Granulated, or pulverized. (b) It binds together the particles of loose soil.

Biological action: (a) It renders the condition of the soil favorable for the development of bacteria.

Almost one hundred young people enjoyed Tuesday evening at Grace M. E. church when the Intermediate Epworth League entertained with its first social meeting.

Miss Oneita Barnes is chairman of the social committee and she together with her assistants, Misses Anita Tracewell, Virginia Merrell, Charlotte Neutse and Mary Meek and Messrs. Richard Branfield, Walter Wheeler, Harold Smith, Robert Reed and Claude McCullough had arranged a most delightful evening's entertainment. The principal feature was progressive conversation. Cards bearing subjects for conversation were first distributed among the young people. There were fifteen subjects and on the reverse side of the card were fifteen corresponding numbers. The cards were filled out in the order of a dance program and five minutes devoted to each topic. At the end of the five minutes a bell was sounded and partners were changed. Among some of the topics were: "Love in a Cottage," "A Model Wife," "New Year's Resolutions," "Model Husbands," "Heart Aches—Why ?" "Ladies' Latest Styles," "Xmas Presents," and "Just Anything."

After the fifteen subjects had been discussed refreshments of sandwiches and coffee were served. The remainder of the evening was enjoyed with other games and amusements.

The Intermediate society has just recently been re-organized and it is planned to make these social meetings a feature once a month. Each member is privileged to bring a guest.

THE BEST INSURANCE OF WORLD PEACE

In a recent issue The Columbus Dispatch printed an editorial entitled, "The Best Insurance Of World Peace." It says:

> The best of all protections against war? There can be no doubt that it would be found in the establishment of popular rule in all the countries of the world. The war has gone on long enough to make it plain that, without the permanent centralization of power in the hands of kings and emperors and their courts, there would have been no war. The monarchs and those about them constructed the conditions which are charged with ultimate responsibility for the war. When the day came, they called their men out to fight, and the latter fought bravely, many of them not knowing what it was all about but blindly believing it was for their country's good.
>
> Why should intelligent people so completely commit their peace, their prosperity, their possessions, their very lives to the hands of a few men no better than themselves, and even worse, if they are moved by ambition and envy and hate? It is too grave a risk. It is a wholly needless invitation to disaster.
> The people must rule. When they do, the chance of war will be reduced to a minimum, and the world peace propaganda will have won its greatest victory. War, according to an old adage, is the last argument of kings. If the world would be rid of war, it must dismiss its kings.

This is good so far as it goes, but it leaves a wrong inference. The fact that a country has as its nominal head a president instead of a king or czar or emperor signifies nothing. Not even the German emperor exercises more irresponsible power in provoking war than does the president of the United States.

Only the other day Senator Owen introduced a resolution in the senate which provides that war cannot be declared in this country only by popular vote. And why not? It is the people who bear the losses and suffering and cost of war. The burdens incident to the prosecution of war and those which follow war are the people's burdens. Why not consult them before incurring the burdens?

A tariff law is never enacted without first consulting the people. On a thousand and one comparatively insignificant issues legislatures and presidents fly to the people to ascertain their opinions, but on this, the gravest of all issues which can possibly confront a people, the American congress can declare war and the president can absolutely create a situation over night which will irrevocably commit our people to the horrors of war.

The Dispatch is right in arguing that the greatest possible insurance against a people plunging headlong into war is to have popular government. But in this one respect, the most important of all, our own country, nominally a free country, is bound hand and foot by its president and congress and has no recourse if a bunch of hotheads in Washington want war.

The Dispatch is right again when it says "The people must rule. When they do the chance of war is reduced to a minimum." But in free America on the all-important question of war or peace the people are as helpless as the denizens of "Darkest Russia." When the people really rule then, and not until then, there will be an end of war. But the condition of popular rule applies just as rigidly here as it does in Europe.

One of the negative effects of the war has been to make football less odious by comparison. It used to be argued by the opponents of the great college game that football was as dangerous as war. But no one says that now.

Ingratitude too frequently follows political success. One of the surest ways to lose a friend is to work like thunder to elect him to office and then watch his head swell until he scarcely recognizes you on the street.

The magician who extracts rabbits from his sleeve and geese from his hat will now give way to the expert congressman who will draw numerous village post offices from the congressional pork barrel.

Those cities which have been taking a special census of their own are so well pleased with the results that they will regard the federal census in 1920 as a piece of rank impertinence.

Ford's idea that by making the engines of war more terrible we can ultimately do away with war, is plausible. But then people said the same thing before this war broke out.

The Wise Guy says: Lots of women get credit for being cool headed when they are only cold blooded.

You May Enjoy Your Meals

If You Will But Equip Your Stomach With The Right Means To Handle The Food.

If you go into a restaurant, cafe or hotel, where all your environments, the lights, dazzling linen, silver, cut glass, music, chatting and laughing women, seem to foretell a pleasant meal, your stomach should not revolt when you read the menu card.

Heavy steaks, soups, oysters, entrees, salads, etc., should hold no terrors for the healthy stomach and they do not.

A small box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets placed in your vest pocket will be sufficient guard against the mad revels of a worn-out stomach.

A tablet taken a few moments after a copious meal will remove any ill effects of food from your stomach and you may eat as generously as those about you.

One of these little tablets will of itself settle all questions of indigestion for that meal and will place your stomach and digestive organs in a better condition for the next.

Your blood will be enriched, and the depleted gastric fluids will be rebuilt.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are natural, active, digestive agents who give to the gastric juice the elements they lack, which ease the stomach, remove irritation and enrich and stimulate the blood.

All of these statements may be verified if you will take but a little of your time to prove them.

Every druggist carries Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in stock and will tell you of their merit. These tablets sell for 50c per box, or send us your name and address and we will send you at once by mail a trial package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 214 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Cold May Not Hinder Work On Reservoir

The coming of cold weather may not delay the work on the new reservoir designed to hold the city's water supply. The Kissner Contracting Company, which has the work of construction under war, is considering a plan of covering the reservoir with canvas and installing steam plants along the concrete thus preventing freezing. If this plan is not adopted, it is likely that the work will be delayed until next spring.

The Acme of Proposals

By EDITH V. ROSS

One day Marguerite Phillips was walking in the grounds about her father's stately mansion when she heard something drop. Glancing about her, she saw on the ground a bit of paper fluttering in the wind. Going to it, she found it attached by a string to a stone. Opening the paper, she read:

> I am not free to enter your grounds for a near view of your ravishing beauty, but there is nothing to prevent my sailing over you and admiring you from a distance.

She had read many stories of wooings, but never anything like this. Huntsmen had appeared to maidens in the depths of forests to speak their love; sailors had been washed ashore from wrecked vessels to love fisher lassies who had rescued them; fugitives from an enemy had suddenly arisen from the earth before girls to excite pity which is akin to love, but never before had Marguerite known a case of woman being wooed from the clouds.

As to her own experience, she had been courted by numerous suitors, but never except in commonplace fashion. In the whole list of her wooings there was not a single new idea for a proposal. It was therefore natural that by this strange method of announcement of a man's love for her she should be much moved. A pleasurable excitement stirred within her, tingling to the tips of her fingers. She followed with her eyes the disappearing aeroplane and pictured a man fit to ride among the clouds looking down upon those who were crawling like worms on the earth.

How godlike seemed this heavenly wanderer compared with any of those who had yet sought her love! Soldiers, sailors, men of wealth, men of intellect, men of genius had been rejected by her, and, though she did not realize the cause of their failure to win her, there was one fundamental reason—none of them had wooed her in a way to strike her imagination. He who had come nearest to success was one with whom she was riding in an automobile. Driving toward a precipice, he swore that if she would not love him both should go down to a frightful death. She yielded, but when safe on terra firma availed herself of a woman's privilege to change her mind.

The aeronaut passed from her sight toward the setting sun, his airboat rocking gracefully, like a bird, between two clouds, at last plunging down behind another, as if going to his home in the blood red orb. Clasping her hands and raising her eyes still higher into the unhorizoned heavens, she exclaimed:

"Was ever a Greek girl more honored by the wooing of a god than I by this daring rover of the ethereal blue?"

Marguerite waited in anxious expectation for the ethereal lover to appear again, or, rather, for his next message, for she had not yet seen him. She sat at her window in the uppermost story of the house gazing skyward, and every time she saw a bird soaring in the far distant heavens she pressed her hand to her heart, exclaiming, "It is he!" When the weather permitted she mounted to the roof, where a bower had been built, and there waited for her eagle lover.

One day while on the roof she saw coming an aeroplane. It flew not more than a hundred feet directly above her, and a bit of paper fluttered down upon the roof. But, alas, she saw not the aerial driver, for until nearly over her head he had kept a high altitude, dropping like a stone and catching himself a moment before the white paper came down like a snowflake in the sunlight. Disappointed in not seeing her lover of the clouds, Marguerite feverishly read her message:

> Tell me that you will be mine. If you refuse I will soar higher and higher till I am lost to earth.

Marguerite provided herself with an immense piece of cardboard, laid it flat on the roof and with a brush and a pot of black paint wrote in enormous letters, "Come to me."

A few days later the aeroplane flew over the house, turned and settled down on the roof. Marguerite's heart was in her throat.

Out stepped John Williams, the man she had last refused.

"Marguerite," he said, "when you refused me a year ago you told me that my proposal was the most matter of fact, the most distasteful, that had been spoken or written by all the men you had refused. Loving you madly, I resolved that if this absence of romance was all that separated us I would strive to renew my offer in a manner more suited to your taste. I studied to enable myself to woo you from the clouds. I can do no more; I can rise no higher into the heavens for your sweet sake. Love me, dearest, or I will fly from here and you shall see me sail into the infinite ocean of space never to see me more."

He knelt, took her hand and kissed it.

"John," she said, "you are the only man of all my suitors who has made a proposal that dwarfs any of those pictured by the most skillful novelists."

She fell into his arms.

"Let our bridal," she whispered, "be as beautiful as your wooing. I will sit beside you in your flight, and above the golden edged cloud we will be made one."

"How about the parson?" asked Mr. Williams.

"The eagle shall marry us."

Not finding the eagle, when they came down they called on a justice of the peace.

Mr. Blakley, Dayton, Ohio, says:

"I was suffering from a prolonged and stubborn case of indigestion, which neither doctors or druggists were able to even relieve to any great extent. A few doses of your remedy, however, not only relieved the distress, but drove it away entirely, without any recurrence in the last ten days. I am consequently very thankful. I certainly will not, in the future, be without them, as my trouble was of long standing."

At Towser's Point

Jessie Lost Her Voice and Suddenly Found It.

By DONALD ALLEN.

Towser's Point was owned by Farmer Towser, and Farmer Towser and his good wife were uncle and aunt to Miss Jessie Carnot, whose father was a lawyer in the city and who had come to the point to spend the summer and be coddled up like a child of ten.

"My stars, but how handsome she is!" exclaimed Aunt Rebecca.

"She's certainly as chipper as the chipperest, and if there were forty fellers around here they'd all be after her," added Uncle Joe.

Opposite Towser's Point were Bayside and Pecan Cove and Lobster Beach. At all these resorts there were numerous camping parties. Uncle Joe had a skiff, and Miss Jessie took to boating and fishing at once. She had not been out more than three times when she came home one day and said:

"Aunty, something's got to be done."

"Well, tell Uncle Joe, and he'll sure do it."

"But I don't want a new fish line or anything of that kind. There's a camp of men across the bay, and this morning two of them came out in a boat and fished right where I was fishing. I heard them talking about me to themselves, but I never looked up. I just know they will make some excuse to speak to me."

"Men are dreadful creatures—all but your Uncle Joe!" signed Aunt Rebecca.

"But what shall I do? I want to row and fish."

"If it was me I'd keep my eyes on my fish line and my mouth shut. That'll discourage them. If it don't I'll have Uncle Joe row out there and tell them that speaking to a good looking girl unless she wants to be spoken to is the same as assault and battery."

"Oh, aunt, but you've given me an idea—such an idea! Why! it will be the funniest thing in the world. It will be such a joke on them. You and Uncle Joe must help me."

"We certainly will, child."

"Then I'm going to play deaf and dumb. If they speak to me I'll make motions that I can't talk. Some of them may come over here for vegetables some day, and you mustn't let on. Say, it will be immense! I'll be deaf and dumb this very afternoon!"

"Well, it won't do no great harm," was Uncle Joe's reply when he came in to dinner. "Lots of women ought to be more deaf and dumb than they are. Too much hearing, too much talking!"

"And lots of men folks ought to be made to sew on their own patches and do their own darning," was the retort of the wife, and then the subject was closed.

That afternoon as Miss Jessie rowed out to the oyster beds and dropped her line a boat with a single occupant came stealing across the bay. He was a young man, and he seemed to find it hard work to locate himself to woo the fish. He threw out his line here and there, but soon sought another place and at length brought up just where he had been aiming for all the time, within thirty feet of the girl's skiff. She raised her eyes to him, and he pleasantly inquired:

"Having any luck here, may I ask?"

With her free hand she made motions to signify that she could neither hear nor speak and turned away. She heard him utter a low whistle of surprise and then mutter to himself:

"Hanged if that isn't a pity in the case of such a good looking girl! I want to talk with her now worse than ever."

Both parties caught a few fish and now and then glanced toward each other, but after a time the young man found it stupid work and lifted his anchor. Miss Jessie looked up at the splash of his oars, and he lifted his cap. She went home and secretly related her experience.

"I guess you've scared them off for good, but I've knowed men to fall in love with deaf, dumb and blind girls. It's just as they take a notion," said Aunt Rebecca.

Soon after 8 o'clock next morning and while Miss Jessie was out feeding the calf there was a caller at the house. It was the young man of the boat, and he wanted vegetables. He also wanted to know in a confidential way if the poor girl was born thus. His questions were partly answered and partly evaded, and he went away saying that he might return the next morning, as he was very fond of cucumbers and tomatoes.

"What does he look like when you are close to him?" queried the girl of her aunt.

"He's a good looking fellow, and he talks as good language as I do, Jessie. I'm afraid you've got into a scrape."

"Why, how?"

"He's coming tomorrow morning, and he's just going to keep a-coming. I could see it in his eyes. How are you going to get over being deaf and dumb?"

"I won't get over it. If he comes I won't be around. I won't go out on the boat today, and that'll discourage him."

But the girl was mistaken. The unknown not only returned in the morning, but while Aunt Rebecca was pulling the tomatoes and picking the cucumbers he walked straight up to the "unfortunate" and wrote on a pad he had brought for the purpose:

"Fishing was good yesterday. I hope you [illegible]."

"I don't care so much about fishing," she wrote.

"Wouldn't you like a sail on the bay?"

[illegible]

"I [illegible]. I hate a [illegible] and [illegible] to put [illegible]."

Aunt [illegible] she [illegible] her [illegible].

"I [illegible]" [illegible] Aunt Rebecca [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

the name—Clarence Denton?"

"Oh, he won't come again! I'm going fishing today, and if I see him coming I'll row away. Perhaps I shall give him a snub."

The snub was administered two hours later. Miss Jessie had reached her fishing ground when the artist was sighted bearing down upon her. She lifted her anchor and rowed straight away, and the distance was too far for him to see the smile on her face or for her to see the look of chagrin on his.

As the day turned out to be warm there was no boating in the afternoon, and neither did Mr. Denton show up for more vegetables in the morning. Miss Jessie pretended to be well pleased, but down in her heart she was piqued.

As a matter of fact, the girl had become indignant by the time she had taken up the oars, and the feeling was added to after she had fished for an hour without a bite or a sight of the other boat. Then came an interruption. She hooked what she believed was a whale, and in her excitement she rose and tumbled into the water with a great splash. The boat did not go over, and she soon got her hands on it. But to draw herself up was another matter. She could not do it. She could only hang on and think of sharks.

She had been clinging for half an hour when a boat suddenly appeared in sight, and at the top of her voice she called out to be saved. She called once, twice, thrice, and then the boat was beside her, and Mr. Clarence Denton was lifting her in by the shoulders. He said no word until she was in and then asked:

"Does it always have this effect on deaf and dumb people?"

"I can't say as to others, but I have surely found my voice," was the saucy reply.

"Well, that's worth the wetting. I saw you when you went over, but was waiting for you to call. As you may lose your voice again if not taken care of, I will accompany you home."

After Mr. Denton had been an almost daily caller at Towser's for three weeks and a pretty constant guest at the dinner table, Aunt Rebecca beckoned Miss Jessie out behind the currant bushes one evening and said:

"If you haven't lost your voice again you'd better tell him that I'm willing. Uncle Joe's willing and that your father is one of the most willingest men in the world. Then you'd better be willing, too, for it's high time a big girl like you was stepping off."

"NOSTRIOLA" FINE FOR "STUFFY" HEAD COLDS OR CATARRH

You most try NOSTRIOLA.

A small trial size tube, which you can get at any drug store will be enough to show what it will do.

NOSTRIOLA is certainly fine for Colds, Croup, Nasal Catarrh, Hay Fever and kindred affections. You just apply a little to nostrils and at once, head is clear as a bell, you breathe freely and distinctly feel your cold breaking up and leaving you.

The nostrils and the air passages are the breeding places for disease-breeding germs. When the membranes are sore and inflamed, you catch cold easily, and colds lead to Catarrh.

NOSTRIOLA is intended to soothe and strengthen the linings of the air passages so they can resist and throw off colds.

The Lord Lansdowne of the last generation wore the Whig dress, a dark blue coat with gilt buttons and a buff colored waistcoat, and habitually bore himself like a master of deportment. Undoubtedly he was aware of his "grand air," but he had a sense of humor, and the author of "The Fourth Generation" says that he used to tell this story about the artist Turner's old maidservant with great zest:

Having rung the bell at Turner's house in Queen Anne street several times without getting an answer, Lord Lansdowne was just going away when the old woman appeared in the area, looked up sharply and inquired:

"Be you the cat's meat man?"

Mrs. Dobbs was trying to find out the likes and dislikes of her new boarder, and she learned in the course of her solicitation.

"Do you want pie for breakfast?" she asked.

"No, I thank you," said the new boarder with a shudder. "Pie for breakfast seems a little too much."

"That's just the way I look at it," said Mrs. Dobbs heartily. "I say pie for dinner is a necessity, and pie for supper is a good kind o' finishing touch to the day, but pie for breakfast is what I call putting on airs."—Youth's Companion.

The Villa On the Hill

By EUNICE BLAKE

Sherbourne's pile was about twenty millions. At twenty-one he found himself in possession of it all, and it was so well invested that he had nothing to do but put it in bank as fast as it came in. He soon tired of this and hired a man to do it for him. Then he went abroad to see the world.

One day while running about in an auto in Italy he saw a girl crossing the road ahead of him. She was dressed neither as a peasant nor a lady, but between the two. In her hand she carried a basket of berries. On a hill near by was an imposing villa. Sherbourne was wondering who lived there when he reached the girl crossing the road.

"Can you tell me, senorina," he asked in a mixture of Italian and Latin, seasoned with a little English, "who inhabits that villa up there on the hill?"

"The Princess Angela Farini."

"Much land with it?"

"Many acres, signor."

"H'm," said Sherbourne half to the girl and half musingly. "I wonder if it is for sale."

"Are you an American?" she asked.

"Yes. Why do you ask?"

"You Americans wish to buy everything you see. I don't think you can buy this place, however."

"I presume there is no harm in trying, is there?"

"Oh, no!"

"I don't think land can be worth much about here. The more a person owns the worse he is off on account of the taxes."

"You might make the princess an offer. She is alone in the world, her parents being dead. She is much attached to the place, but on account of loneliness would prefer city life."

"Thank you very much for your information." And Sherbourne drove on.

When Sherbourne came to the entrance of the place he turned in and ascended the hill, admiring the expanding view as he rose. He thought that he would like to settle down on the place, collect a library and spend his days reading. He had not yet reached an age where a man realizes that a home is no home at all without a woman in it. At any rate, he made up his mind to buy it, and when Bob Sherbourne made up his mind to buy anything he considered it as good as purchased. Driving up to the entrance of the villa he alighted.

"I have called," he said to a liveried lackey who admitted him "to ask if the Princess Farini would consider an offer for her place."

The flunkey showed the visitor into a cozy reception room, then disappeared. Presently he returned and asked how much the signor would give. Sherbourne made an offer of 500,000 lire ($100,000). The lackey, after several trips to and from the would be purchaser, at last brought him a card of a real estate agent in Rome, with a message that the agent would deal with him. He went to Rome and finally purchased the place and everything in it for half a million dollars.

He had occupied it a month when one day while driving by a small villa near the foot of the hill on which his place stood he saw the signorina he had met in the road some time before. She was dressed like a lady and was watering some flowers. Sherbourne pulled up, lifted his hat and told her that he had made the purchase of which he had spoken to her, adding that he was sorry he had done so—he had found it lonely. The lady said that she had heard the princess was sorry she had sold her home. After some further conversation, during which it came out that the lady knew the princess, she said she would see her and learn if she would buy it back. Sherbourne was to call for a reply the next day.

When he called he was invited into the villa, and negotiations were opened, this time the princess dealing through her friend instead of the agent. The friend proved attractive, and Sherbourne prolonged the bargaining in order to enjoy her society. At the end of a month she had him enthralled. He proposed to her and was accepted.

Sherbourne now declared that he would not sell his villa. He and his bride would occupy it together. To this his fiancee agreed, but later said that she would not like to offend the princess, who had been kind to her, and Sherbourne was obliged to resell his place. His fiancee, however, informed him that the princess had graciously permitted her to be married in the villa on the hill.

When the day of the wedding came round Sherbourne drove to his former abode, and when his bride appeared he noticed that she wore a coronet. Surprised, he asked if her friend the princess had loaned it to her for the bridal.

"I am the princess," was the reply.

"You the princess!" exclaimed the groom.

"Yes; the day I met you I was roaming about my property in common costume, as is my habit, to pick berries. I saw that you were a rich American and concluded to sell my property to you which is all I have of worldly goods. Then it occurred to me to get it back with you also."

"You need not take me with it unless you like," said Sherbourne, miffed.

"I like."

Diplomacy.

The shah once asked a group of his courtiers whom they thought the greater man, himself or his father. At first he could get no reply to so dangerous a question, the answer to which might cost the courtiers their heads. At last a wily old courtier said:

"Your father, sire, for, although you are equal to your father in all other respects, in this he is superior to you—that he had a greater son than any you have."

"Gentlemen:—Through your instrumentality I have been saved from a premature grave. On December 14, 1904, I was taken with Typhoid Pneumonia, which developed into Tuberculosis (bacilli were found). In February, 1905, I went to Fort Worth, Texas, and later to Canon City, Colorado. After being there two weeks my physician informed me that my case was hopeless. Three weeks later I returned home, weighing 103 pounds, the doctor having given me no assurance of reaching there alive. On July 14, 1905 I began taking Eckman's wonderful remedy for Lung Trouble. Now I am stout and well and can do any kind of work about my grain elevator." (Abbreviated.)
